The Assumption of Virgin Mary (Agia Triada) is a small, ancient church located in the village of Agia Triada, near the town of Kifissos in the Attica region of Greece. The church is dedicated to the Assumption of the Virgin Mary and is believed to have been built in the 11th century. It features a simple, rectangular structure with a central dome and a tall, narrow bell tower. The church is surrounded by a low wall and is situated on a paved area. The background shows a clear blue sky with some white clouds.
